One of Kovno Forts Captured With 4,500 Prisoners—Three Forts of Novegeorgievsk Fall Also

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—The British transport Royal Edward, conveying troops to the Dardanelles, was sunk by a submarine in the Aegean sea last Saturday. Probably one thousand men were lost.

Advice from Athens says King Constantine accepted the resignation of the Goumris cabinet and that M. Venizelos was invited to consult with the king today.

Activity is increasing along the Austro-Italian front. Rome claims progress in the sector region, in the Barchin and Rodolbach valleys, and in the Monte Nero zone.

Vienna declares Italian attacks at various points along the front. The Austro-Italian reports on the Dardanelles operations declare attacks by newly landed troops of the allies have been repulsed.

The Germans have won a new and important success at Kovno, Berlin reports today, capturing the forts that lie between the Niemen river and Gostik, 2 1/2 miles to the south of Kovno proper.

Much was killed, including 240 cannon, and 4,500 prisoners were taken in the Kovno operations. Additional information made out of a German report on Novegeorgievsk, where three forts have been captured. At this fortress 2,400 prisoners, 13 cannon and other material were taken.

Further progress by the armies of Prince Leopold of Bavaria and Field Marshal von Mackensen, pressing toward Brest-Litovsk, is reported.

In the west, the French stopped a German attack at Haute-Chaveche, in the Argonne, where the trenches for an assault but were driven back by the French fire, Paris reports.

Berlin declares the French evacuated one of their trenches near the Argonne, in the eastern Argonne. The capture of a British aeroplane and the driving off of two destroyers by the French from Ostend also are recorded.

HORSES STOLEN IN TEXAS DELIVERED TO TROOPS OF CARRAZA

With Shooting of U. S. Troops and Continued Bandit Raids, Border Situation Assumes Ugly Aspect

(By Associated Press.)

BROWNSVILLE, Tex., Aug. 17.—The border situation along the lower Rio Grande assumed an ugly aspect today. Authorities here received reports that Mexican troops in force last night at Progreso and their firing across the river striking troops of the Twelfth United States Cavalry was the only aggravating feature of the situation.

Bandits in recent raids on the Texas side, were delivered this week in Matamoros, the Mexican town opposite here, to the United States troops.

Delivery of these horses and the fact that the Mexicans are gathering openly and in large numbers for two days renewed suspicions among the Americans that Carranza officials were either lax in discipline or without sufficient dependable troops to cope with the bandit element on the Mexican side.

The death of Corporal Wilman in the fight at the Progreso crossing last night and the wounding of Lieutenant Roy O. Henry and Private Jackson has intensified feeling in this section.

"For nearly twenty miles about Progreso, where the crossing is, there have been reports of bandit activity. Reports by Carranza officials last night that more than 180 Mexicans had crossed into Texas under cover of the night proved unfounded. Officers who were with the Progreso force were sure all the firing came from the Mexican side of the river.

At night's twenty-minute fight at Progreso was fought entirely by Mexicans firing across the Rio Grande from the Mexican side. The United States troops in getting through American patrol into United States territory. This was the report today to Colonel Robert Bullard, commanding officer of the Brownsville district. Colonel Bullard strengthened the patrols about Progreso and Mercedes yesterday, so there are 300 cavalry and infantry in that vicinity.

ATLANTA WINS NASHVILLE GRAIN CASE SECOND TIME

Interstate Commerce Commission Orders End Put to Discrimination

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Southern railroads were ordered today by the Interstate commerce commission to cease discriminating against the grain trade in rebilling and reshipping grain and hay no longer is it refused Georgia.

The practice was ordered stopped several years ago but the commission annulled the order when the Supreme court reversed the decision and the commission again today held the practice discriminatory. The commission also decided that the rates charged by Southern Pacific and other lines for transportation of cotton seed meal and cake in carloads from El Centro to El Paso, Tex., for export, and to El Paso, Tex., and from Calexico, Cal., to Galveston, Tex., for export, are all unreasonable.

The commission ordered rates not exceeding 40 cents per 100 pounds, and 40,000-pound minimum in each case.

Frank's Last Letter to His Chief Attorney

L. Z. Rosser Makes Public Letter Written by Prisoner July 1 and His Own Reply

(By Associated Press.)

L. Z. Rosser, who was leading counsel for Leo M. Frank in his court fight, had no statement to make Tuesday in reference to the lynching of Frank, but said he desired to make public the last letter received by him from Frank and his own reply to that letter. The letters speak for themselves. They follow:

Milledgeville, Ga., July 1, 1915.

Hon. L. Z. Rosser, Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mr. Rosser: You will, I know, pardon me not having written to you sooner. Letters which I had written to others of counsel were meant for you to share.

At this writing my health is much better, my food having nearly left me. I am sleeping fine and my appetite is good.

The warden and his staff are very kind and solicitous.

Will you please send me J. M. Stanton's present mail address. I would like to write to him. I would also like to have the present address of Colonel M. J. Toernan.

I have been given some "chores" in and about the prison building, commensurate with my present physical condition. I go to bed at 8:30 p. m. and arise at about 4 a. m. My work consumes about 5 1/2 hours a day. Of course I must be ready to do any other work that I have several hours a day for reading, writing or any other form of exercise and diversion. The sunshine and atmosphere here are great. I have plenty of opportunity to view plant life and my field for observation in the criminological field is practically limitless.

"Still" (scribbles) and the environment of a mental institution, while interesting in their way, pall upon the vision of an innocent man. Physically, I am a part of it, spiritually, I am totally foreign.

Yet, as the old saw has it, "ad extra sapienter." It causes me for always, even though I am present in a jail designated as a "lifer."

I want to assure you how deep is my respect for you as a man and attorney. I am not in this predicament because of anything you did, or did not do. My misfortune is the result of a "system" coupled with ignorance and carelessness.

Won't you kindly remember me to all inquiring friends and with every good wish, I am,

Cordially yours,
LEO M. FRANK.

P. S.—My dear mother delivered your message to me. "Baptist" said.

Wind Subsides but Water Stands Five Feet Deep Over City With Several Buildings Burning Beyond Control

DALLAS, Tex., Aug. 17.—(Via Wireless to San Antonio)—Galveston today had passed through one of the worst storms within the past fifteen years and now is ready to repair the damage done by last night's hurricane. Five feet of water stands in the city and is slowly draining off. The storm started today and are yet to be placed in the hands of the city.

At this writing my health is much better, my food having nearly left me. I am sleeping fine and my appetite is good.

I have received your letter of recent date. I have been intending to write you for quite a while but the excitement here in Atlanta since your communication I had meant often to visit you, but your situation so far from me and so oppressed me with lack of power to help you, that I could not do so. I would have liked to see you as often as I would have liked.

You know that I have given you the best word of my life. It did you no good, but I hardly think it was my fault. I do not believe that anyone could really have a good word. PEOPLE THROG TO SEE WHERE BODY HUNG FROM ROPE

After Urging the Crowd Not to Indulge in Further Demonstrations, Judge Morris Hurries Frank's Body to Atlanta

Leo M. Frank's dead body, which is now in the hands of an Atlanta undertaker, was found hanging by the neck from the limb of a tree two miles east of Marietta at an early hour Tuesday morning, and the absence of gunshot wounds or other violence indicated that Frank was alive until hanged by the mob that took him from the state prison farm at Milledgeville Monday night.

At the outskirts of Marietta, just in front of the National cemetery, Judge Morris overtook the undertaker's wagon in an automobile, lifted the body in the long basket from the wagon to the automobile, and sped with it to Atlanta at top speed.

At the outskirts of Atlanta the body was met by an Atlanta undertaker in an automobile and was again transferred and rushed at top speed to a place which was not disclosed.

About 7 o'clock Tuesday morning W. J. Frey, a former sheriff of Cobb county, who lives two and one-half miles east of Marietta on the Roswell road, saw four automobiles pass along the road in front of his house. They were going like the wind. In the second or third car he recalls seeing a man of Frank's description, wedged between two men in the back seat of the car.

Half an hour later Mr. Frey drove into Marietta, and there learned that Frank's body had been found hanging to a tree in a grove two miles east of Marietta, near the road which he had driven into town.

BODY IS DISCOVERED.

In company with Gus Benson, a Marietta citizen, and W. W. Yarn, a traveling man from Augusta, Ga., Mr. Frey drove back along the road, and found the body in a grove of young trees on land owned by himself, and within a stone's throw of his gin-house. A number of people had already arrived ahead of them and were viewing the body. The news of the discovery spread like wild fire, and soon the road was full of people coming from both directions.

It appears from the facts known and stated by Mr. Frey that Frank was hanged between 7 o'clock and 7:30 o'clock Tuesday morning. He did not see the body until he had driven to the place where it was found. He says that the men who hanged Frank had done their work and gone, and further shows that the body had not yet been discovered. From the road the body was screened by the leaves of the trees, so that it would not have been noticed unless a passerby had been looking for it.

CROWDS THROG TO SCENE.

A horrible sight met the eyes of the people who were first to arrive at the grove, and a still more horrible sight met the eyes of the later arrivals, who found not only the body swaying in the wind, with the gaping red wound in the throat, but surging around it a closely packed mass of men whose excitement was something fearful.

A grass rope, brown in color, about half an inch in diameter, was thrown over the limb of an oak tree, near the trunk of the tree. One end of this rope was around the neck of Leo M. Frank, tied in a hangman's knot, and the other was tied to the base of a sapling some twenty feet away.

HANDKERCHIEF COVERS FACE.

Frank hung with the top of his head near the limb of the oak tree, his feet about four feet above the ground. A white handkerchief was over his face and the corners knotted at the back of his head. The hangman's knot lay against his right jaw. The wound in his throat, where William Green attempted to kill him at the state farm a few weeks ago, was pulled open, underneath his left ear. The rope was above the wound underneath his left ear, but toward the front of his throat the rope ran under the jaw, and then over the head.

Frank's body from the waist up was clothed in a thin, white pajama jacket. Worked in the jacket on the left side of the chest were some letters in red thread, that looked like "L. M. F." The sleeves of the pajama were clipped away by souvenir hunters, who were holding pocket-knives, until both sleeves were gone as far up as the elbows.

HANDCUFFS BIND WRISTS.

The arms of the dead man, thin, exposed, hung straight and stiff, with the wrists handcuffed in front of the neck and the fingers and thumbs blue, while the left hand showed the healing cut where Frank defended himself from Green's knife attack at the state farm.

The body from the waist down was wrapped in a dirty piece of brown cloth that looked like khaki. It was stretched across the front like a skirt drawn tight, and tied together by the corners behind, somewhat toward the left hip. The edges of the cloth, just barely meeting on the left side, would flap open in the wind as the body swayed back and forth, exposing the leg of the dead man from the knee down, blue and stiff like the arm.

Around the ankles was tied a piece of grass rope, about the same size of the rope Frank was hanged with, and this rope was cut from around the ankles by souvenir hunters soon after the crowd gathered. At the outskirts of Atlanta the body was met by an Atlanta undertaker in an automobile and was again transferred and rushed at top speed to a place which was not disclosed.

SEEMS SPOOKISH THINKS ONE LADY

Vitalitas Made Her Thin While Husband Got Fat Out of Same Bottle

"There is something about this Vitalitas that seems uncanny or spookish," said a heavy lady to one of the Vitalitas demonstrators. "It is making me thin. I have lost 28 pounds in three weeks, while my husband is getting fat on it. He was as slim as a toothpick, while I . . . well you can see for yourself what I am. And I was a lot worse a month ago."

"We got Vitalitas for my stomach trouble and also because he was run down and had rheumatism in one ankle. It helped both of us and when we noticed he was getting weight about a half pound a day and I was falling off even faster. I have taken anti-fat but none of them ever brought me down like Vitalitas has. I would like to know how it happens to act so oppositely on him and me."

Vitalitas does not act oppositely but acts with wonderful precision in one direction, that of correcting unhealthy conditions, which cause fatness in one person and leanness in another; or dysentery in one and constipation in the other. Nothing in nature has so marked curative and corrective effects as this new earth fluid. It forces from the system detritus, generally of stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels and blood, and the demonstration is made by Vitalitas at Jacob's Pharmacy, 23 Whitehall street or write there for information.—(Adv.)

PRISON OFFICERS TELL GRAPHIC STORIES OF SEIZURE OF FRANK

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Aug. 17.—"I was called to the door just as I was preparing to retire," said Captain J. M. Burk, superintendent of the state prison from a 6 o'clock Tuesday morning, "and following my usual custom I walked out. When I passed the threshold two strong men grabbed me by the arms and instantly snatched my wrists. Four others stood guard over me, two with shotguns and two with heavy pistols."

"I remonstrated and they declared it was no use for me to squirm as they had come for Leo Frank and they said they knew that, but they were going to take me where they knew Frank was quartered."

"I was marched up to the penitentiary building by a guard, which was redoubled as we proceeded. When we reached the building a demand was made for the gate to be opened and one of the men began cutting the wires and informed me the prisoner would be killed as soon as an entrance was effected."

FRANK SEIZED.

"The gate was unlocked and Night Guard S. Hester came forward, but he was immediately covered and ordered to throw up his hands. Half way up the steps I was halted while half a dozen men rushed by and made a dash for Frank's room. One of the prisoners who witnessed this scene declared that four men seized Frank by his arms and legs, while a fifth grabbed him by the hair and he was dragged out of the hospital rooms and bumped down the stone steps. With me looking on, Frank never uttered a word, but apparently he was suffering intensely and groaned as from pain inflicted in handling him in his wounded condition."

"The crowd informed me that they did not intend to harm anyone except Leo Frank and told me not to have any fear. The affair was completed within the space of five minutes, it seemed to me, and almost before we realized the enormity of the occurrence it was a written chapter. WOULD'NT REMOVE HANDCUFFS."

"During the time Frank was handcuffed and under guard. When the crowd brought Frank down and started off I asked the fellow who had snapped the handcuffs to unlock them, but he laughed sardonically and stated that if I would accompany them that they would take off the irons. I retorted by saying, 'Damned if I'd go anywhere with them.'"

"The whole procedure was timed as a well ordered and methodical proposition and only a few words were spoken. It certainly being agreed for a leader to do the talking. Only two of the men were masked, but I did not recognize any of them. Then in less time than it takes to tell it, they were off and I could see the lights flashing as they went over the hill towards Meriwether, the road that leads Atlantward."

THE WARDEN'S STORY.

Warden James E. Smith of the state penitentiary system, described the attack as a very carefully planned affair.

He said: "I was spending the night at my home adjacent to the main building as I usually do under normal conditions. I had just gone in when I was called from the front. I inquired who it was, and then some name was given in a conciliatory tone which I did not understand, but as my name was called familiarly I went to the door with a lantern in one hand and my other hand on my pistol."

"When I opened the door half a dozen men confronted me with pistols and guns thrust into my face. They commanded me to throw up my hands, and there was nothing else to do. At this juncture my wife rushed up and fell swooning in my arms and the men ordered me to come on and go to the camp."

"My wife interposed and they told her they were my friends and her friends and for her not to be afraid, but she kept clinging to me. Then one of the men told them to go on, but they reconsidered and said one or two more of them had better remain with me. They kept me covered for probably five or six minutes. Then they jumped into an auto passing by and were gone. The affair was consummated so quickly I hardly knew what it was carried out and I am completely at my wits' end in the matter."

Commissioners at Prison When Mob Seized Frank

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Aug. 17.—The entire board of the state prison commission happened to be at the penitentiary here Monday night when Leo M. Frank was taken from the building. The board, consisting of R. E. Davidson, chairman; L. Rainey and T. E. Patterson, members, arrived late Monday afternoon to begin preliminary work on the improvements planned for the penitentiary. This morning all three of them speak in most regrettable terms over the occurrence they witnessed in part.

They were spending the night at the residence of Superintendent J. M. Burk and had just gone into their rooms when the alarm was sounded that a mob had come for Frank. Chairman Davidson was first informed and he hurriedly imparted his information to Commissioners Rainey and Patterson and they made hasty effort to get on the scene, not fearing any personal violence, but before they could get to the prison grounds the mob was beginning to move off.

Chairman Davidson said early today that he was unable to give out an official statement of the matter, but that later in the day the commission would issue a statement. He declared that the affair was so quickly carried out until he hardly realized that any trouble was at hand. Commissioner Rainey voiced the same sentiments and Judge T. E. Patterson said that it was one of the most disastrous occurrences that has been wrought in Georgia's history for many years.

Instead of pursuing their plans as originally planned and spending a few days in Milledgeville, Commissioners Rainey and Patterson left on an early train for Atlanta. Chairman Davidson will remain on the grounds and supervise the local situation.

Frank's Parents Learn Of His Death by Mob

(By Associated Press.)
NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—When Rudolph Frank and his wife, parents of Leo M. Frank, learned definitely today that their son had been hanged near Marietta, Ga., they drew the shades at all windows of their home in Brooklyn and refused to answer the door bell or telephones.

Neighbors said the Frank family had begun an eight-day period of mourning which was customary under the Jewish religion.

Early callers at the Frank home were met by Otto Stern, Frank's brother-in-law.

He said Mr. Frank and his wife were asleep and had not been told of the kidnapping of their son.

Stern said he learned of the matter through the newspapers. With two hours the family had received word that Frank's body had been found.

Governor Slaton Shocked
By News of Lynching
(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 17.—Former Governor John M. Slaton, of Georgia, who commuted the sentence of Leo Frank, is here visiting the exposition and was informed this morning that Frank had been lynched.

The governor plainly showed that the news was a great shock to him. He expressed unqualified condemnation of the deed, declaring that it is contrary to all the civilization of Georgia and will never meet with the approval of her people.

GOVERNOR'S NOTIFIED OF FRANK LYNCHING

Secretary Notifies Authorities to Apprehend Members of the Mob

Shortly after 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, Mayor R. F. Hobbs, of Marietta and state senator from the Thirty-fifth district, notified the governor's office by long distance that the Frank's body had been positively identified about two miles east of Marietta on the Roswell road. This was the first official notification to the state of the finding of the body.

Mr. R. Jones, private secretary to Governor Harris, then made an attempt to reach Sheriff Hicks, of Cobb county, by phone, but was unsuccessful, as the latter had left for the scene of the lynching. Mr. Jones immediately got in communication with Mayor Hobbs again and asked him to notify the sheriff that the executive offices expected him to make every effort to locate and apprehend the members of the mob.

At noon Secretary Jones telegraphed Sheriff Hicks to the same effect. After waiting from 1:30 o'clock until 4:45 o'clock Tuesday morning, during which time he received no official notification of the taking of Leo M. Frank from the prison farm, and after vainly trying to obtain additional information from the sheriff's county, around Milledgeville, Governor Nat E. Harris left Atlanta at 7:30 on the A. & A. for Fitzgerald, where he has an engagement to speak at the Confederate Veterans' reunion.

Raymond Stapleton, executive secretary to the governor, said that the governor decided to leave for Fitzgerald only after concluding that there was nothing he could do by remaining in Atlanta, in the light of information then received. Mr. Stapleton said that arrangements had been made to call the governor back from Fitzgerald if occasion demanded.

Governor Harris' statement, when first informed of the affair, was: "I am both shocked and aggrieved, and in common with all good people of Georgia who stand for law and order, I feel that a great wrong has been done, and that our state will not look with approval on such an act."

Mr. H. C. Grace Dies
ALLSTON, Ga., Aug. 17.—Mr. Henry C. Grace, a leading citizen of Toombs county, died at his home after a short spell of sickness. He was a Confederate veteran and one of the most prominent men in the Forty-third district of Toombs county. The deceased was a little over seventy years of age and is survived by wife and four children, three sons and one daughter. Mr. B. H. Grace of Vidalia, H. E. Grace and J. A. Grace and Mrs. T. T. Paroloth, of Cedar Crossing.

History of Frank Case Told in Brief Form

Leo M. Frank was found guilty of the murder of Mary Phagan on August 25, 1913. He was the superintendent of the National Pencil company in Atlanta, in the basement of which the girl's body was found by a night watchman on the morning of April 27, previous.

Repeated attempts were made in the state courts to obtain a new trial for Frank, but without avail. Attempts to obtain a writ of habeas corpus in the federal district court at Atlanta and finally in the supreme court of the United States were futile.

On the night of June 21, this year, two days before the date set for the prisoner's execution, he was removed from the county jail in Atlanta and rushed to the state prison farm upon orders from Governor Slaton, now retired. The next day

May Extend Road COLUMBUS, Ga., Aug. 17.—The Columbus chamber of commerce, the Daughters, Alpha Commercial club and other organizations of the district have taken up with President Asa G. Candler, of the St. Andrews Bay railroad, the question of extending that splendid line from Dothan, Ala., to Columbus, and possibly Atlanta.

The governor announced that he had granted the petition made in Frank's behalf asking that his death sentence be commuted to life imprisonment.

Asbestos

(Youth's Companion.)

Most of us know little more of asbestos, the strange rock fiber that is almost as soft and pliable as cotton or woolen fabric, than that it is used in making fireproof theater curtains. In other ways it is fast coming into use as a "safest first" building material. Not only does it protect against fire, but it is also a nonconductor of heat, and is therefore useful in preserving an even temperature. Most of what we use in this country comes from Canada, but Arizona is now beginning to produce asbestos of excellent quality.

STEAMSHIP EASTLAND RETURNED TO OWNERS Vessel That Drowned 1,000 May Be Used Again for Excursions

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—The steamship Eastland was formally released from the custody of the United States government and turned over to its owners today. What disposition will be made of the ship, which capsized three weeks ago, drowning nearly 1,000 persons, has not been determined.

Plans are being considered by the owners, it was said, to have the boat overhauled, and if inspection shows that it can be fitted up safely to carry passengers, it probably will be taken to some other port and used in the excursion trade.

Preparations have been made to have the boat towed to the repair docks in South Chicago. Marine construction experts concluded examination of the ship and submitted their report last night to United States District Attorney Clynne. He said the report would be made to the grand jury.

POPE EXPRESSES HIS SYMPATHY FOR FRANCE

(By Associated Press.)

PAULIS, Aug. 17.—A letter from Pope Benedict to Cardinal Liégeois, of Rheims, dated August 1, in which the pontiff expresses deep affection for France, and in which he says the "church" is proud to be the daughter of France, is printed by La Croix. The pope, after expressing his satisfaction at learning that indignation over Louis La Folle's interview with him has been appeased in France, says:

"The interview reproduced neither our thought nor our sentiments and many passages in it were invented out of whole cloth. * * * France, that country so noble and so generous, to which it has pleased us to give testimony of our sovereign benevolence, and to which it is sweet to us to apply the glorious title, 'eldest daughter of the church,' certainly could not doubt our love for her or our true sentiments in her respect."

LITTLE BEDTIME
STORIESBy Thornton W. Burgess.
(Copyright, 1915, by J. C. Ward.)

To wake in the night in a terrible fright.
Is a terrible thing, you'll agree.
I hope and I pray that nothing that way
May happen to you or to me.

OF course it didn't happen to Timmy the Flying Squirrel last night, but to him it was just the same as it would be to you or me in the night. You see, like several of the other Little People Hooley the Owl and Baby Coon and Billy Possum, Timmy sleeps in the daytime and so he was fast asleep and dreaming when Farmer Brown's Boy pushed over the old dead tree in a hollow of which he made his home. It would have been bad enough if he had been awake and had known what was going on. But he wasn't, and so when that old dead tree fell with a crash it was just the same to Timmy as it would be to you if your house should tumble down about your ears in the middle of the night when you were fast asleep.

With a frightened little shriek Timmy started to scramble out of his snug little bed, but there was no where to scramble to. You see when the tree fell the little round doorway was closed because the tree had fallen with that side on the ground. So there was Timmy a prisoner in his own house and not knowing at all what had happened. His heart went pitapat, pitapat, as if it would burst. "What was it? What has happened?" he kept saying over and over to himself. Of course as soon as he had time to really think he knew that the old dead tree had fallen. "It must be that a great wind blew my house over. And that is queer, too, when I went to sleep last morning I didn't notice any signs of a storm."

Then he listened for sounds of rain or branches rubbing together as they do in a high wind. But there wasn't a sound. It was as still as still as that. "That's queer," thought Timmy again.

But a minute later he heard a sound that put all thought of a storm out of his mind. It was the sound made by somebody sniffing. Yes, sir, that is just what it was. Little cold shivers ran all over Timmy. Any towards him and offered to help him. They talked with discontent over conditions that forced them to submit to the treatment that Jake and Powers meted out.

With a low warning shout from one of their number, all jumped to their places and were busy at work when Jake came around the corner of the nearest lumber pile—that is all but Hurd. He had not been quick enough, and the foreman, with an angry snarl in his eye and an oath on his lips, gave him a vicious shove that sent him spinning across a low pile of lumber. He crashed to the ground beyond it and rising quickly, stood leaning against the pile weakly, endeavoring to get his breath.

"Here you get to work and cut out that saw," yelled Snyder, as he bounded across the low pile in Hurd's direction.

"Get to work now, not next week," he added, as Hurd was slow in responding, emphasizing the words with a vicious kick.

Sudden, swift passion seized Hurd and consequences were not far off. He thoughtless as to what the future might hold for him—he lunged fiercely at his foreman and struck him squarely between the eyes. His was the strength of the desperado, the strength of the man who has nothing to lose and nothing to fear.

The startled shout—half amazement and half approval—which greeted Hurd's action, as much as the sudden display of defiance against his boss, brought him quickly to his senses, and he stood for a moment staring at his hated persecutor as the realization of one big enough to sniff like that was to be feared. Sniff! sniff! sniff! It was right at the point where Timmy's doorway was closed by the tree that had fallen. There it was again, sniff! sniff! sniff! Then there followed a snout sniffing and another whine.

"Hello! What have you found, Bowser?" cried a voice. "You act as if there was somebody or something under there."

"Bow-wow!" exclaimed a great voice that would have frightened Timmy still more if that had been possible, which it wasn't. He was already as frightened as he could get. Then Timmy heard a heavy foot dig in the earth close by his doorway.

Of course, you know, if Timmy didn't, just what had happened. Bowser the Hound had smelled Timmy and was telling his master in the only way he could.

"Wait a minute, old fellow, and I'll roll that tree over and we'll see what you are making all this fuss about," exclaimed Farmer Brown's Boy.

A minute later Timmy felt the old dead tree being lifted. Then it was rolled over so that his doorway was free once more. He was just getting ready to spring out and jump for his life when there was another of those dreadful sniffs, this time right in his doorway. Then Bowser barked as if greatly excited. Farmer Brown's Boy walked up and tried to peer into the hole, but he could see nothing because it was dark inside.

"Looks to me like nothing but an old woodpecker's hole," said he. "But I never knew you to make a mistake. Perhaps there is a mouse in there. Now you stand back and I'll rap on the tree with a stick."

So Bowser obediently stood back, though he didn't want to, and Farmer Brown's Boy rapped on the old dead tree with a stick.

DO IT

JAKE was not a student of human nature, but he had native shrewdness enough to know that men who were driven as he drove his men, were not apt to be overburdened with loyalty and devotion. He knew that discontent with his methods and dissatisfaction with his pay was making many of the men restless and unreliable. And so, taking advantage of the shelter offered by many piles of lumber, he sneaked quietly back to his duty, spying for any signs of letup on the part of the men.

And like most of those who look for trouble, Snyder found it. He had hardly left the docks to answer Powers' summons when Karl Hurd, delicate of frame and hardly strong enough for the work he had been forced to accept, staggered back, dropped the piece of lumber he was handling and almost ran to the ground from sheer weakness. Too much work and not enough pay was slowly killing him, and only the thought of his wife and daughter gave him strength enough to keep up.

Several of his fellow laborers came upon the platform and then slowly drew himself up to a standing position. He was too relieved at his escape from impending danger to give much thought to the fact that his job was probably gone—that he was out of employment. That a realization of his full plight would have come to him soon as possible, had a sudden commotion in the interior of the car attracted his attention. Glancing through the glass door he noticed Jake, the amiable revolver still in his hand, advancing along the center aisle of the car. His face was working angrily and every now and then he would cry out for revenge. He had been close upon Hurd's heels in the mad race and a duplicate of the wild lunge that landed Hurd on the front platform had catapulted him onto the back one.

The Powers lumber yard lay in low ground just east of the trolley right-of-way, and at the head of the road, glancing into the interior of the car, saw his pursuer advancing upon him, the car was swiftly moving onto a trestle that carried the trolley high into the air, over the lumber yard, and on toward the city.

It was a time for quick action and Hurd was equal to the occasion. With a new strength from his momentary respite, Karl gathered himself together for a spring, and murmuring a prayer for safety, he hurled his body forward. He landed on top of the trestle, and as he lay winded and panting on top of the trestle, he saw the car disappearing into the distance, leaving him a lone figure on the trestle in a momentary lunge.

When I'm
Rich Then
Do It
By Edna K. Wooley

WHEN I first knew him, several years ago, he was a ruddy-cheeked young fellow with a wife and a baby and a modest salary. They lived frugally, were healthy and happy.

But he was discontented with the modest salary and went in for getting rich. Now he has a high-powered automobile that costs a small fortune in upkeep. He lives in an expensive up-town apartment on a basis an extra dollar for the maid. His wife dresses as well as her neighbors, and the little girl has already learned to discriminate according to the social standing of other little girls.

He also has acquired a saffron skin and a bad case of dyspepsia, and when I ran across him in the bank rotunda he was grunting about his feelings.

"I'm miserable, and I don't know what the matter with me," he said. "I'm getting thinner and thinner, and I don't like my meals any more. One of the boys told me to go to a 'gym.' I've tried it, but it doesn't seem to do any good."

"Why don't you do a little walking in the great fresh air?" I suggested. "No time," he answered. "You might take time for health," I insisted. "Ever try a garden? Since starting mine I've gained ten pounds and feel like a bear."

DO you know some time I am going to carry my meat to the most public place on the street? I don't wonder you look amazed; but it makes me so cross to hear a conversation such as I heard this morning.

"A woman came into the butcher shop and asked for a 'fresh roasted chicken.' The butcher picked up a nice, enough looking bird and showed it to her. She made a few polite remarks, enough looked at the feet and said: 'You are sure this is a fresh killed chicken?' 'Oh, yes, madam; it is perfectly fresh.'"

"Sure it is not cold storage?" "Oh, certainly not cold storage." "Very well, then, I'll take it." And my lady walked satisfied.

"As soon as she was out of the shop I said, 'Why did you tell her that you weren't a cold storage chicken when you know it is?'"

"He looked a little sheepish and said, 'Well, if I had known she would have gone across the street and bought it, and I need the sale as much as that man does, I would tell her so. I'm telling our customers that stuff is cold storage when it is, is educating away the prejudice the women have, and also telling them the seasons when they can get fresh food, and when they can't.'"

"That will be the burden of my stump speech," I said. "I shall cry, 'Ladies, hear, hear, you can get fresh steaming chickens from September until March or April, and fresh roasted chickens from October to February, and fresh broilers from July to November.'"

"And if you will permit to asking for a roasted chicken in June or a broiler in January, you are going to get a cold storage bird; and should be thankful for it." The United States department of agriculture has a fine bulletin on the subject of the fresh food chicken, and every housewife would find interesting and instructive reading. In that the difference between water-chilled and air-chilled poultry is described at length. The water-chilled ones are cooled in water, they lose both flavor and nutrients in this way, and absorb water, which makes them heavier; but to the consumer's eyes they look fresher, so the dealer can pass them off for fresh killed poultry.

"The dry-packed chickens are wrapped and packed in boxes and placed in storage. One authority says—I get my chickens when they are frozen hard and then they are thawed in water, which is what every housewife should do."

If the kiddies are broken out with heat use common rye flour in place of talcum powder. Teach the boys to sew on buttons. A drop or two of onion juice applied to the spot where the "bee stung you" will quickly overcome the poison.

When I'm
Rich Then

By Edna K. Wooley

WHEN I first knew him, several years ago, he was a ruddy-cheeked young fellow with a wife and a baby and a modest salary. They lived frugally, were healthy and happy.

But he was discontented with the modest salary and went in for getting rich. Now he has a high-powered automobile that costs a small fortune in upkeep. He lives in an expensive up-town apartment on a basis an extra dollar for the maid. His wife dresses as well as her neighbors, and the little girl has already learned to discriminate according to the social standing of other little girls.

He also has acquired a saffron skin and a bad case of dyspepsia, and when I ran across him in the bank rotunda he was grunting about his feelings.

"I'm miserable, and I don't know what the matter with me," he said. "I'm getting thinner and thinner, and I don't like my meals any more. One of the boys told me to go to a 'gym.' I've tried it, but it doesn't seem to do any good."

"Why don't you do a little walking in the great fresh air?" I suggested. "No time," he answered. "You might take time for health," I insisted. "Ever try a garden? Since starting mine I've gained ten pounds and feel like a bear."

"I don't know," I said. "I don't know what the matter with me," he said. "I'm getting thinner and thinner, and I don't like my meals any more. One of the boys told me to go to a 'gym.' I've tried it, but it doesn't seem to do any good."

Voice of the Garden
(Copyright, 1913, by W. Werner.)

SEBASTIAN often gazed admiringly at the little plot of ground, laid out by some geometrical precisionist, which he had bought from the city fathers as a site for his new house. He was mostly old-fashioned varieties, whose beribboned walks and flower beds were fringed by ferns and stars. Inside the white walls, and quite overtopping it, was a crown of glory was the Little cot in its center, mistily pretty back of the garden.

The old lady who lived there was as capable as her garden. Her blue eyes shone like diamonds, and she could give. Sometimes she sewed roses steamed upon her small porch, or she would make a pair of gloves of snow white hair making a stranger fast to their brilliancy. There always came a time when she would turn her lips moved and the refrain invariably the same: "Will he remember me?"

Then, too, her thoughts were of them, when she and Robert, her husband, had been young. She thought of things. Life then had not meant itself into "just waiting." It was a life of doing, of giving, of loving. She kept the cottage and cared for Bob, her only child, so happy and so grateful that he never knew how long he had been alone.

A change came. Slight at first, it grew more and more until it was crushing her; health; she said was giving up time to the child. Later there came a day when she died.

Bob was selfish, disobedient, and

"WILL HE EVER COME?"

Useful, and she, his mother, could see no fault. His father, perhaps, in her eyes, was a little too natural and strange, shortsighted.

It was not until Bob was sixteen that he was really only wretched. He stood between him and his father, concealing all she could, feebly protesting, and she, his mother, with her dissipated companions and his frequent absences, she felt that she might give to him, and not until his debts were beyond her ability to pay, that she was forced to leave him to reach her husband.

Robert had been furious. "The fault was mine," he said, "I have allowed myself to be spoiled by the boy. Against my judgment I did wishes you have persevered in and I have been a failure."

"No Robert," she had protested, "my mother never yet ruined a child."

But that evening there had been a scene. Robert had laid bare his soul's agony, and she, his mother, had been a faithful teacher, advice and a demand that he should conform to the ways of the world.

And Bob, with his blushing lips and gleaming eyes, had said, "I will do as you wish, mother, but I am sick with aching heart, shuddered at the look on the faces of father and son and I cannot go."

That was the end. She never saw him again. After a sleepless night she learned that he had been sent to the United States, but she knew, without a word, money, she knew, and no reasoning with him. She had seen him, and she had herself that after a while he would come home. In her heart she knew he would.

Her husband's assurance that what he was able to do was to give her the power he possessed would develop more quickly and surely among men than among women, was the guiding hand.

He went as a tramp, was her coat of arms, and she, his mother, was associated with the idea. She thought of him as a tramp, she dreamed of him as a tramp, she scrutinized the faces of the tramps who came to her door and sent them on their way comforted for his sake.

When the years had piled up—eighty-two, twelve—and she had not heard from him, she gave up hoping. Then Robert died, and she was indeed alone, unable to endure the loneliness which surrounded by familiar scenes and faces she drifted to a distant city, and after a while, with the longing for the old home stronger upon her, bought the cottage with its plot of ground. Gradually the old life asserted itself, and presently cozy nooks spoke to her of Robert and Bob. Then by a sudden resolution, the garden became a replica of that other, where memory still lived.

One morning she sat on her porch with a magazine in her hand. It was this day twenty years ago that had brought such grief into her life, and her wounded heart bled afresh. In vain she tried to read. Article after article proved meaningless; but the portraits appealed to her. "Leaders of the New Congress," closely held her attention.

"None of them is handsome as I thought my son would be when a man," she mused, turning the leaves. "But the position they occupied brought the thought of the study and energy, required to reach a place like theirs, and she fell to dreaming how her son now, a man, would look. Would his face have the low, ignorant, vicious expression of many of the tramps she had seen?"

"I see where I failed," she moaned aloud. "Somehow I could never understand that work and study were necessary. In my ignorance I ruined my boy."

A fuchsia, heavy with its purple bloom, slipped from its prop and fell. She got up to raise it. Suddenly her gate latch clicked, and, glancing up, she saw a doctor coming in. She had seen him pass several times lately, going to a near-by house, where there was a sick child.

"I noticed your garden and came in for a better view. I hope you will pardon the intrusion."

"You are very welcome," she told him.

"Many of the blossoms are at their best. The hot sun brings out their beauty. If you like I will pick some for you."

"Thank you. You are very kind. It reminds me of my mother's garden. The rose hedges, the shape, and arrangement of the beds and the flowers themselves. You have a beautiful and an artistic home."

"Not a home. Home is where there is love and companionship. I have neither."

"You live alone?"

"Except for my flowers. My husband is dead and my son, whom I, in my ignorance ruined, left home, a tramp. I think of him always. Sometimes he is in city slums, again in railroad camps, or in prison. My son, whom I would

But he never written nor sent me a word."

She turned, her hands full of flowers, but they fell to the ground.

The doctor, with bared head and folded arms, was intently looking at her.

"Mother," he whispered.

Later, when they could talk, he told her that for a long time he had been sullen and angry; then, afterward, ashamed. That when he had decided on a genuine reformation he dared not face his parents without the proof of it.

"Oh, it was hard, little mother," he half laughed, "to forget that the world was made of my especial pleasure, and young years of work in college went before I could hold in my hands the proof that I was determined to take to you. Then it was too late. Father was gone, and no one could tell me of your whereabouts. I searched for you, and finally gave you up as dead and returned here to practice medicine, and if it had not been for this accidental call I should have gone away and we might never have met.

Nestling in the arms of her tall, handsome son, she murmured: "It was not an accident, dear. The garden called you; it spoke to you of home and mother."

IMPERSONATES DORSEY TO SECURE RELEASE OF GIRLMan Who Works Ruse to Get
Girl Out of Training School
Is In Jail

By getting a friend, supposedly a lawyer, to impersonate Solicitor Hugh Dorsey, a ruse was worked by J. W. Johnston, thirty-five years old, 41 West Harris street, by which he succeeded in obtaining Miss Minnie Griner, sixteen years old, away from the Georgia Training school for girls Sunday afternoon. Late Monday afternoon both Johnston and the girl were arrested by County Patrolman Carter.

Miss Embree, superintendent of the school, which is a reformatory for girls sent up from the courts of the state, said that Johnston, called up Sunday and told her that Solicitor Dorsey had consented for Minnie Griner, sent out from Fulton county, to leave the school on probation. Johnston further said that he was the girl's legal guardian and that he would come out and get her.

Then, said Miss Embree, a man telephoned out to the school and told her that he was Hugh Dorsey, representing himself to be the solicitor, he told her to let the girl out and that Johnston, the girl's guardian, would call for her. Johnston, a mechanic working for the Dorsey Motor Car company, then rode out the Baker's Ferry road in an automobile to the school, got Minnie Griner and drove away with her.

Miss Embree's suspicions were by this time aroused. She ascertained from the solicitor's office that Hugh Dorsey had not instructed her regarding Minnie Griner's release. Monday night, Johnston, the pseudo guardian, rode out to school again, accompanied by two young women in an automobile, to return to the state the clothes worn away by Minnie Griner.

Miss Embree telephoned the county police, and County Officer Carter made a record down from his home in Battleboro, N. C. to the school, where he arrested Johnston, charging him with driving an automobile in an unlawful manner.

Later the officer found the girl and took her back to the home.

Johnston was carried to the Fulton county town and held there under a warrant sworn out by Miss Embree charging him with driving a car without a license.

Officers are working to find out who the friend of Johnston was who impersonated Hugh Dorsey, but, so far, have been unsuccessful. Miss Embree says she sure she's a lawyer because of her familiarity with the legal procedure of getting a girl out of the home.

Telegraph and telephone companies stated the principal wire damage had been done in the vicinity of Houston, according to the best reports obtainable.

Vessel Blown Through Causeway at Galveston

By Associated Press, Aug. 17.—It was stated at the offices of the Santa Fe railroad here early today that a message had been received from Galveston stating that a large vessel was blown through the causeway connecting Galveston with the mainland. Two work trains were ordered to Galveston to assist in repairing the damage.

It was stated that the message was received late last night, just before wire communication was interrupted.

After losing their wire to Galveston, just night the Santa Fe offices here retained communication with Alvin, mid-way between Houston and Galveston for some time, finally losing it when the telegrapher at Alvin stated that water was rising and that he could not be compelled to leave. Before going, however, he stated that the water in the Gulf had ranged from three to ten feet in depth.

reinforcements for the Twenty-ninth division and details of the Royal army medical corps. Full information has not yet been received, but it is known that about 600 have been saved.

So far as reported officially this is the first instance in which a British transport has been attacked successfully by a submarine.

It had been a matter of pride with the British government that it had transported hundreds of thousands of troops without the loss of life.

The British announcement shows that the Royal Edward was engaged in conveying troops to the Dardanelles front. German submarines sent to these waters to assist the Turks have been very active.

One of them, the U-51, under command of Captain Otto Herring, made the voyage from Wilhelmshaven to the Dardanelles and sank the British battleship Triumph.

The Royal Edward had been engaged in the transport service since early in the war. On August 11, 1914, she sailed from Montreal with five hundred French recruits on board. The last report showed her arrival on October 18 at Avonmouth, England, from Montreal.

The Royal Edward was 11,117 tons gross and net long. It was owned by the Canadian Northern Steamship Co. of Toronto. She was built in Glasgow in 1909.

Turks Claim Repulse Of Allied Attacks

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 16.—(By Associated Press.)—Attacks by newly landed Allied troops against Turkish positions on the Gallipoli peninsula have been repulsed, according to a Turkish official statement here today. The communication reads:

"On the Dardanelles front the enemy, who since the last day has had fresh divisions, attacked our positions with great numbers of soldiers and machine guns and a quantity of rifles.

"Near Seddik Bashi on the right wing we exploded a mine before the enemy's trenches. The enemy replied all night with an unsuccessful waste of ammunition.

"On the other fronts there has been nothing of importance to report. "On the night of August 15, our torpedo boat destroyer was struck by our artillery."

Next Week to Tell Fate Of New Russian Line

LONDON, Aug. 17.—The Times' military correspondent says:

"In conformity with the general plan of retreat, Grand Duke Nicholas has withdrawn his forces from Poland to points west of the city of Oshewitz. Bialystok and Brest-Litovsk and we shall learn within a few days whether he intends to make a long stand on this front."

The staffs of the Russian armies have performed difficult tasks with the greatest competence. Attacked in an untenable position by six or seven Austro-German armies the Russians fought bravely and are now in line.

"The Russian armies are neither ten nor yet not yet of despair, nor can they not be dismayed by the menace of Von Hindenburg in the north is displaced by the menace of the German army at close grips with the grand duke and the able to give the latter from throwing himself upon Hindenburg with all his forces."

"Chief interest still lies in the struggle north of the Nieman, in the defense of Kovno and in the decision of Grand Duke Nicholas as to whether to retreat to the line of the Polesia or to continue his retreat. The real crisis of the grandiose operation is still to come."

Allies Will Find Friend
In New Ministry of Greece

PARIS, Aug. 17.—French opinion considers it premature to see in the defeat of the German ministry acceptance by Greece of the line of policy outlined by the Entente. The real crisis of the grandiose operation is still to come.

"But at least," says the Matin, "the allies will find in Venizelos a statesman capable of applying broad judgment and intelligence to the consideration of his country's interests."

line of Greece has accepted the resignation of the Gounaris cabinet, which was tendered to him yesterday afternoon by the former premier, according to a Reuters' dispatch to Athens. Eleutherios Venizelos, leader of the opposition, which counts a reported to be showing concern over the attitude of Bulgaria.

First Parliament Of Greece Opened

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 17.—A dispatch to Reuters' agency from Athens describes the opening of the first parliament of new and old Greece, says the royal family was not represented but that the capacity of the house was taxed by a throng of diplomats, their wives and officers of the army and navy. The arrival of Venizelos, leader of the dominant party, created "indescribable enthusiasm."

Premier Gounaris read the royal decree opening the session. The deputies were then sworn in. After the election of a new speaker, Gounaris announced the resignation of the government and that the cabinet was being dissolved. The political crisis had been solved.

There was another enthusiastic demonstration in the streets when the result of the election of the speaker was announced.

Crisis Has Not Been Reached in Russia Yet

LONDON, Aug. 17.—The British admiralty's record of transporting 600,000 soldiers without loss of life, so far as reported officially, has been broken. The torpedo of a submarine has at last found the mark and the official statement reads:

"The bottom in the Aegean sea, with a loss of life which may reach 1,000. In the land fighting, a crisis has not been reached in the present stage of the eastern campaign. Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian commander-in-chief, will not be able to assure the safety of his army until the menace posed by the operations of Field Marshal von Hindenburg in Courland is removed. The Russian army has been driven back toward the Arar, while Kovno is still summing the German tide. The chief struggle, however, centers in the region north of the Nieman."

Between the Nieman and the Bug the German drive evidently is making some headway. Although Petrograd denies that the attacks have been repulsed after heavy fighting. Along the middle Bug the Austrians and Germans have forced several crossings. If the Russians fail to hold the valuable transverse and inactive. There is no other chance for the Russian army to check the Austrians and Germans definitely.

From the standpoint of the allies, the situation is not encouraging.
